Special attention has been given to the culture of the pecan, as this is the most productive of our native nuts. In recent years orchardists have grafted and budded the home wood until it has produced the largest and best flavored pecan in the world.

A lie comes nearer to being immortal than any other product of human genius. It will "bob up serenely" though you down it a thousand times, and contrary to the methods of a "rolling stone," will "gather moss" as it trundles along.

Very little interest is being taken in truck farming in our locality. There is a large demand for produce and we have as good soil to raise it as anywhere. A commission house here would investigate this profitable business.

When peace is definitely declared in Mexico, and the people of that nation get down to business, we wonder what those fellows, who have been howlers for intervention, will say of the far-seeing President Wilson?

A canning factory for putting up vegetables, fruits, fish, crabs, oysters, etc., would be a paying investment here. We have all the products aforesaid, and have the seasons to raise them the year round.

President Wilson is so busy trying to map out the best policies for the administration, that he isn't paying Teddy Roosevelt any attention.

It is generally conceded that the weather man in Washington should change his predictions.

GOOD ROADS BILL READY FOR SENATE

U. S. To Issue $500,000,000 In 3 Per Cent Bonds, States To Do Likewise.

Washington, July 21.—Senator Bryan's good roads bill, a substitute for the Shuckelard bill, already passed by the House, was ready to be reported to the Senate today. The measure had received the approval of the Senate Committee of Pastoffice and Post Roads.

Under the terms of the Bryan bill, the Federal government would issue $500,000,000 in 3 per cent bonds to the amount of $500,000,000 in lots of $100,000,000 each for five years. Before States could participate in the funds they would be required to issue an equal amount of 4 per cent bonds, which, when deposited in the Treasury Department, would be exchanged for cash. The one per cent difference would make up a sinking fund to aid the State in retiring the bonds.

Creation of a Federal highway commission to supervise the expenditure of highway funds is a feature of the Bryan bill. The commission would be composed of the chairman and members of the Senate and House committees on roads, the director of the office of public roads and a United States army officer.

LAST OF 18 GANGSTERS IS SHOT TO DEATH.

1892 Mississippi Killings Recalled By Physician.

Hazlehurst, Miss., July 21.—The last of the gang of eighteen murderous negroes, who killed J. C. Davis, of Hopewell, Miss., in October, 1912, is dead.

Dr. O. Dulaney, of Dyersburg, Tenn., who lived near the killing scene, and who narrowly escaped being murdered by the gang too, tells of the last gangster's death in a railroad camp at Dyersburg.

The gangster was shot July 11 at the camp by another negro, Dr. Dulaney, was called to attend him.

He at once recognized the negro as one of the gang. Questioning resulted in the negro making contradictory statements about the 1912 killing.

Dr. Dulaney enclosed the dead gangster's photograph in a letter to Capt. W. Matheny here, who was sheriff at the time of the gang killing.

It is recalled that the seventeen other negroes in the gang were either lynched or legally hanged.

VARDAMAN OPPOSES JONES FOR BOARD.

Chicago Banker Replies to Adverse Report of Senate Committee.

Washington, July 21.—The fight over President Wilson's nominations to the Federal reserve board took on renewed activity today when Thomas D. Jones, of Chicago, applied to the adverse report of the Senate banking committee on his nomination. The minority, which supports him, at once began working on its report.

When it is presented to the Senate later this week, a vote may be forced.

Senator Vardaman, one of the Democrats opposing Mr. Jones, issued a statement declaring he could not vote for him.

"I have the same objection to him, and men of his kind, being put in control and management of our banking and currency system that the Christian would interpose to a pagan teaching theology in a Christian college or an imperialist administering laws designed to establish a democracy. I am sorry the President appointed him," he said.

Has President Lost Popularity?

The New York Evening Post, which considers itself a supporter of President Wilson's administration, speaks of the steps necessary to "regain his lost popularity." This assumes that the President is, to some extent, unpopular or has that he has lost much of the popularity he once held, but whether this is true, and if true at all, how true no one can say.

The Evening Post believes that Mr. Wilson was not an extraordinary popular man when he was elected to the presidency in 1912, and this is true. "Neither his candidacy nor his personality," says the Louisville Post, "attracted the wild enthusiasm that was accorded Mr. Roosevelt by the latter's admirers. The rank and file of the Democratic party wanted Mr. Wilson nominated for president, and had Taftman Hall and a few other conspirators been able to foil Mr. Champ Clark upon the party at Baltimore, the probabilities are that Mr. Roosevelt would have been distanced in second in that year's presidential race."

This is true, and yet there was no wild acclaim in regard to Mr. Wilson's personality. He was respected and very generally admired, but he was not popular in 1912 as other great party leaders had been. But Mr. Wilson has now been president for nearly one year and a half and during that period he has shown powers of leadership beyond even what had been claimed by his friends, and an ability to put through congress a legislative program of tremendous importance.

His policies have provoked opposition in some quarters, and the country has had its fair share of calamity, but there is no doubt that the President has gained and not lost in popularity, regardless of the popularity or unpopularity of his party. Individually he is much stronger before the people than he was in 1912. The attitude of the press toward him, having a few malignants such as Hearst and McLean, is courteous, and even such a hidebound worshiper of protection as the San Francisco Chronicle says, "The President is an honest gentleman imbued with the loftiest ideals and glowing in the great opportunity which has come to him to uplift mankind."—N. O. States.

"Come Home, Sisson, Come Home"

The Macedonian cry goes up from Mr. Sisson's frightened supporters all over the district, "Come home, Sisson, come home." Morrison is ringing the bell all along down the line. He is telling the voters about his congressional vote on various propositions, none of which surprises us more than Mr. Morrison's declaration, which he asserts is from the Congressional Record, that Mr. Sisson voted to appropriate money out of the federal treasury to support a school maintained by the Catholic church. The vote, Mr. Morrison states, was on a proposition to reimburse the bill with the view of striking out the appropriation and Sisson voted against the recommitting. It was a well fixed faith of our fathers that the church and the State should be separated and so firmly fixed was this idea in their minds that it was written into the federal constitution. Regardless of what church controls the school, not a dollar of the money in the United States treasury should be given to its support and maintenance.

Mr. Morrison is speaking from two to three times every day and there can be no doubt that what he says has happened to us, the work is there and should be done, thoroughly, bravely, with a smile, and, more than all, with helpfulness.

What if Mrs. Lowell had asked herself: "What's the use?" and answered as often as we are inclined to do: "There is no use." Suppose she had drifted through life instead of shouldering her burden and taking up the march. Suppose she had drifted through life instead of shouldering her burden and taking up the march. There would have been no cool fountain bearing her name as an inspiration to passersby. Mrs. Lowell would answer the question: "What is the use?" with "It is of use not only to do our work well, but everyone can make his character strong and beautiful through doing his work."

"Sincere, candid, courageous and tender." That is what we may become while doing our work, whether the work be sweeping a room or striking the keys of a typewriter or holding an audience enthralled with a song.

"But I am bound down by poverty," someone answers. So was the woman whose epitaph is cut in the brown stone at the foot of the fountain. She had to work all her life in the poorly regulated services of public charities. Yet she gave "hope and help to the fainting and inspired others to concerted labors."

Poor and alone at 21, she made the two-thirds of her life blossom as the rose, because she watered that life with unselfish service.

Remember the little brown fountain when next you begin to say "What's the use?"

Shamrock On The Way.

Falmouth, Eng., July 20.—Shamrock IV, Sir Thomas Lipton's challenger for the America's cup, reached this port today under convoy of the steam yacht Erin. She had a rough passage from Plymouth.

Did You Ever Say, "What's The Use?"

(BY ADA PATTERSON.)

In the present green oasis in the desert of New York's dust and burning streets, in Bryant Park, stands a beautiful little fountain. The fountain is the white wall of the city's great public library. Low and round and brown, the ripple of its ever falling water calls one as the tender, low voice of one we love. It is wholesome and unobtrusive as the fragrance of magnolias in the corner of an old-fashioned garden.

I have seen tired men stagger toward it, heat drunken, fling off their hats and bend their heads toward it and quickly revive beneath its refreshing spell. Work worn women stop near it and their pallid faces freshen at sight of it. Babies with old, drawn faces play about it and recover infantile semblance.

There hear the splash of the four continual streams of water from its corners, feel the moist breath of it, and the peace and cheer of it enters their souls. Some I have seen sending with thoughtful brows above this inscription in the flagging at the fountain's base:

This fountain commemorates the strong and beautiful character of Josephine Shaw Lowell.

Born 1842. Died 1905. Wife for one year of a patriot soldier. A widow at twenty-one. Servant of New York State and City in their public charities.

Sincere, candid, courageous and tender. Giving help and hope to the fainting and inspiring others to concerted labors.

In this limp season of sweltering days I have seen many persons pause in this growing beauty spot of New York and listen to the voice of the fountain and read the inscription at its base, and not one of them but has gone away with straighter shoulders and braver faces. All are heartened by its message.

The fountain is an answer to the very common question: "What's the use?" We all ask that question at times, and we are likely to repeat it much too often.

We ask it at times when life seems to resolve itself into trivialities. "What's the use of doing the same thing over and over day after day and endlessly?" asks the housekeeper.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

By local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; also cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give one hundred dollars reward for the discovery (made by mail) of a cure for deafness, which can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

And Sometimes Keener. Hunger makes the brain heavier.

"What's the use?" we say to ourselves when we are discouraged and disheartened by a disappointment or stung by a falling blow. "What's the use?" we ask when a soul we are trying to lead to heights slips back into the depths.

This is the way Josephine Shaw Lowell, a widow at 21, answered the question in speech and in life: "It is always worth while to do our work as well as we can do it. No matter what happens to us, the work is there and should be done, thoroughly, bravely, with a smile, and, more than all, with helpfulness."

What if Mrs. Lowell had asked herself: "What's the use?" and answered as often as we are inclined to do: "There is no use." Suppose she had drifted through life instead of shouldering her burden and taking up the march.

A Freaky World Coming.

A freaky place this world will be in 3,000 years or so if the predictions of scientists come near being fulfilled.

Statistics show lately that girls are putting on weight right along and growing taller with a rapidity which has never been observed before. And, according to all indications, it seems that in the somewhat distant future the "females of the species" will be much taller than the "male." One of the main reasons ascribed to this development is the growing love of sports and outdoor exercises on the part of women. They have more time to devote to sports, while the men are at business interests.

Careful investigation by the British association spread over a lengthy period shows that girls of 13 now are taller than the boys of the same age. The most striking development of the girls takes place between the eleventh and thirteenth year. Before that the boys and girls are generally about equal.

The late Dr. Forbes Winslow, a specialist in mental diseases, held that the increase in lunacy was so great that we would all be mad races 900 years or so. But he also thought that it was possible that the mad world might give way in time to a race of geniuses—a state of affairs, however, which, in some people's minds, would be just as mad as the mad era preceding it.

According to Dr. Clement Lucas we are likely also to become a one-toe race. In an address which he gave not long ago before the Royal College of Surgeons he stated that the big toe has undergone a really extraordinary development, while our other toes, not used so much, are tending to become smaller and smaller. If the world goes on long enough, in a million year or so the useless outer toes, being less and less employed, may have disappeared entirely.

And so much that it is gloomy it is a relief to find that there is one modern prophet what foretells a good time coming. M. Jean Finot, well known French writer, has cheerful predictions regarding the future of women. "The women of tomorrow," he says, "will wear no jewelry and will not bother their heads about the fashions. They will be more elegant than they are nowadays, but will have renounced the arts and graces which they owe to men and to the favors of fate. The women of tomorrow will be perfect women instead of an incomplete man."—Chicago Tribune.

Negress Claimed 120 Years.

Union City, Tenn., July 18.—An old negress who died here at the age of 120 years, as far as could be traced, and who was probably the oldest person in the State, insisted that she had lived through the war of 1812 and that one of the happenings of her eventful life was the seeing of General George Washington and the Marquis de Lafayette on their way to Mount Vernon, West Virginia.

The old woman belonged when a child to the Oglebys, who went to South Carolina from Virginia. Her mind was very dim on the subject of the war of 1812, but she called it General Packington's war, and it is supposed by many that she confused it with the Mexican war, which took place later. She described clearly the looks of the soldiers in their dress uniform and tall caps with cockades along the Battery and countrymen coming in to be enlisted. She served as a maid on a large plantation belonging to a Mr. Miller, who appeared to have married an Ogleby. She commended the pety of the Millers in glowing terms. He was a minister and had a very religious brother who came down from Massachusetts, preaching through the country and holding services on the Miller plantation, which the slaves attended.

His name was William Miller and he may have been the William Miller of Pittsfield, Mass., founder of the Millerites or Adventists. As a maid in the Miller household it was the negro girl's duty to help make the wearing apparel of the slaves belonging to the plantation. She said she saw General Washington and his friend about this time. She left for New Orleans when she was nearly grown because a dressmaker's maid in a building at the corner of Carondelet and Canal. Her mistress, a mysterious "Miss Julia," becoming frightened at having to see so many funeral corteges passing on Canal from the hat shops in the bay, took her maid and fled to Nashville. Here it seemed "Miss Julia" expired after having lived through the "great stars fell."
